LEDs are suitable for forming a high-resolution display, because LEDs provide a high image quality due to a small element gap between pixels. Further, LED lamps have a long life of approximately 10,000 hours, which is approximately five times longer than that of a filament-based lamp. For improving a resolution of an LED display, the number of LED lamps which emit red (R), green (G), and blue (B) light must be increased.

Dendritic cells (DCs) are essential for the induction of immunity in most animal models. The induction of immunity involves antigen presentation, costimulation, and cytokine production at the site of antigen presentation. The presence of DCs in local draining lymph nodes is a prerequisite for the induction of immunity.

Lymphocytes only enter the lymphatic system from high endothelial venules (HEVs) in a process that is mediated by interactions between the selectins and their ligands on the lymphocytes and the HEV-expressed lymphocyte addressins. However, the lymphatic capture of dendritic cells (DCs) by virtue of HEV-expressed integrins has never been described. We have examined the lymphatic capture of dendritic cells (DCs) after mucosal vaccination. Single dose respiratory influenza virus infection, given intranasally to mice, resulted in the accumulation of DCs in the draining mediastinal lymph nodes (mLNs) 2 days after infection, and in the nasopharyngeal-associated lymph nodes (NALT) 1 day after infection. DCs in the mLNs were the product of a germinal center reaction and were at a stage of maturation similar to those seen in Peyer's patches. The DCs in the NALT were primarily sinus lining DCs, whereas the DCs in the mLNs were an accessory cell population. Interestingly, the DCs in the mLNs were transferred to the recipients upon intravenous administration and induced a vaccine response similar to those in the mLNs of the recipients. This is the first study to show that
